

Dance Movement Psychotherapy (a specific form of body-oriented psychological therapy) for MUS

Payne, H.(2009a) The BodyMind Approach to psychotherapeutic groupwork with patients with medically unexplained symptoms: A review of the literature, description of approach and methodology selected for a pilot study. European Journal for Counselling and Psychotherapy. 11, 3,287-310.

Payne, H. (2009b) Pilot study to evaluate Dance Movement Psychotherapy (the BodyMind Approach) with patients with medically unexplained symptoms: Participant and facilitator perceptions and a summary discussion. Int.Journal for Body, Movement & Dance in Psychotherapy. 5, 2, 95-106.

Payne, H. & Stott, D. (2010). Change in the moving bodymind: Quantitative results from a pilot study on the use of the BodyMind approach (BMA) to psychotherapeutic group work with patients with medically unexplained symptoms (MUSs). Counselling and Psychotherapy Research, 10 (4), 295-306.

Fordham, R & Payne, H (2009) A Group BodyMind Approach to medically unexplained symptoms: Proof of concept and potential cost savings. Unpublished paper, University of Hertfordshire.

Payne, H; Eskioglou MC & Storey, J (2009) Medically unexplained symptoms: A holistic bodymind approach to group therapy for depression and anxiety in primary care (this project was supported by the East of England Development Agency)

Payne, H. (2011). The space between psyche and soma: The results and findings of a pilot study evaluating The BodyMind Approach with patients suffering medically unexplained symptoms in primary care. The Space Between: The Potential for Change: Selected Proceedings of the 10th European Arts Therapies Conference. University of Plymouth Press, London.